Food Science and Industry Graduates from the Kansas State University will have demonstrated:

1. The ability to apply critical thinking skills in the context of distinguishing fact.

2. The application of scientific principles to food and food products.

3. The ability to learn and develop skills to deal with potential changes and diversity in food industry.

4. Awareness of and appreciation of ethical practice and diversity within the food profession.

5. Ability to use oral and written communication skills effectively in a group or team environment.

6. Competence in quantitative skills.

6. Experience with computers and other emerging information technologies and their application to food science.